CORRECT DRESS FOR MEN.

In fashion for shoes there seems to be a reaction against the use of patent leathers for street wear.

Light weight derby, gray to brown in color, are sold for summer wear. They have narrower brims and shorter crowns.

Probably more black cutaways will be worn this year. They can be made as light and cool as the grayish colored coats and look far more "dresy."

The colored shirts outdo in brilliancy the plaid of the tailors' shops. Most of them are made with the collar all off a piece. Nevertheless, white collars and cuffs may be worn with striped shirt fronts, or the reverse.

The only overshirt that will be worn much, the tailors say, is the "Westerfield," a loosely fitting, short pattern, with open fronts lined all the way to the edges. The materials used ranged from wide wale worsteds to plain grays in worsteds and Venetians.

The Prince Albert coat still retains a moderate degree of popularity with stout, middle aged men. It is good for afternoon receptions, for walking and for driving. Yet the cutaway answers every purpose just as well, and the younger men have almost unanimously discarded the heavy frock coat.

Scarfs are bright, and seem a little broader. Both four-in-hands and made up ones are worn. Collars turn over much the same, and are no higher. Shirts for evening wear are made plain, or embroidered, or in pique. Nearly all have three buttons, though one stud is seen oftener, perhaps, than two.

SPORTING AND ATHLETIC.

Harry Hutchens is in good running form once more. He has challenged any man in England or America to a match of 300 yards for $200 or $500 a side.

William Edwards, a Chicago pugilist, says that he was not the Billy Edwards who was knocked out in one round near Roundy by a local amateur a few weeks ago, as he has not been in any fight lately.

Jack Joyce, the champion heavy weight fighter of Ohio, and Jack Fogarty have signed contracts to fight ten rounds, Queenberry rules, within 100 miles of Pittsburgh, on April 7. The fight will be with two ounce gloves for the gate receipts.

E. D. Morgan has announced that his yacht Mayflower will not go across to take part in the junior racing on the Clyde, as The London Field recently announced. He said he could not spare the time to take her across himself, and that it would not send her under any circumstances otherwise.

At the international skating tournament, held at Albany, on Feb. 25, the English and German competitors were defeated by a Hollander. The victor covered the distance of about two miles in seven minutes and seven seconds. In the champion professional race of two miles, James Smart and George Lee, both Englishmen, came off victors.

There's Something in a Name.

Whether one of the finest lake barges of the build of a few years ago was about to be launched, one of her owners was told that the boat would be christened the Magnolias. He protested against the name, basing his objections on the well known tendency of sailors to shorten such long appellations. His remonstrance prevailed.

Senator Palmer was a member of the party that dispensed vessels' nomenclature on this occasion, was ennobled by Capt. Westcott to suggest a short, expressive name for a new craft. "I will," said he, "call her the Ilium."

This slight, expressive epithet induced the captain that the Norse or Flemish names contained names suitable for lake craft, and there was instanced the poem Kaikevala, dealing with the mythology of the Finns. In their earlier days on the shores of the Baltic, that people believed that there was a race of demigods who ruled objects in nature. There was Tapio, who ruled the forest; Ahi, the lakes and rivers; Tuon, the realms of death. There were a sufficient array of alliterative names to suit the owners of fleets, such as Kyllikki, the beautiful; maiden who scoured the address of Kuuma; Kullervo, the strong and courageous youth; Kaleva and Kuitzakko.

Senator Palmer said that Persian legends and poems abounded with pleasing names. Nostradamus, "the light of the harpies," and Nestor, the enchanter, had been appropriated by the yachtsmen of the Atlantic. There was Bendemore, Chilimber, Kauroom, Cadessa and Azul. He was asked if he would adopt Peramor, Fadiroon and Mokuma, from Moore's "Lalla-Rookh," and answered that he would not institute because they were distinctive and unattractive. There were plenty of others, Zefica, Mirzala, Zanara, Peri, Zaraph, Mahadi, Canadeva, Zemzam and Selama; and Israfil, who, the legend said, had the most melodious voice of all God's creatures—Cor. Detroit Free Press.

That Horse Taming Secret.

Apropos of "Horse Whispering," a correspondent points out that the mystery is very simply explained by Borrow. Here are his words in the "Romany Rye": "I knew a cob in Ireland that could be driven to a state of kicking madness by a particular word used by a particular person in a particular tone; but that word was connected with a very painful operation which had been performed upon him by that individual, who had frequently employed it at a certain period while the animal had been under his treatment. The same cob could be soothed in a moment by another word used by the same individual in a very different kind of tone—the word 'doughblasta,' or sweet fasted." Some time after the operation, while the cob was yet under his hands, the fellow—who was what the Irish call a fairy smith—had done all he could to soothe the creature, and had at last succeeded by giving it gingerbread buttons, of which the cob became passionately fond. Invariably, however, before giving it a button he said "Doughblasta," with which word the cob by degrees associated an idea of unmixed enjoyment. So, if he could rouse the cob to madness by the word which recalled the torture to its remembrance, he could easily soothe it by the other word, which the cob knew would be instantly followed by the button, which the smith never failed to give him after using the word "doughblasta."—St. James' Gazette.
